HOUSEKEEPING FACTS AND FANCIES.

BY RUSTICS.

Some Benedict, against the rule
To "tell no tales outside of school,"
Has sought a slight relief to find,
By freeing thus his burdened mind:

"When I was younger, by a score,
And pictured happiness in store,
One vision filled the years to come—
A happy, peaceful, quiet home.
I deemed that, quite above the rest,
That man must be supremely blest,
Who, finding a congenial spouse,
Had settled down to keeping house.
Well, in the ordinary roll
Of Fortune's wheel, I reached the goal,
And entered on the promised land
Which, in prospective, looked so grand.
I bought a house, and with a wife
Set up an independent (?) life,
Scarce one decade has passed away,
And this is how it stands to-day:

"Dear, do you know the wood is out?
The milk bill, too, is due, no doubt;
The stove wants fixing, and you know
The night-key's broken square in two;
The front bell-wire, the pesky thing,
Is loose, and so the bell won't ring;
And don't forget to get some meat,
The cat's had nothing fresh to eat
For nearly two days. By the way,
The poker broke the other day,
And I must have a new clothes line,
I have to piece it out with twine.
Oh, yes—and there must be some hooks
For that cupboard, and shelves for books.
The salt is out, and that reminds,
A little sugar of both kinds,
And butter—but the last we had
At H. & K.'s was awful bad;
Buy somewhere else, and get some wire,
And prepared kindlings for the fire,
And have them dry, the last were damp—
The man who sold them was a scamp.
Let me remember, if I can—
Oh, yes! I want a new stew-pan,
And nutmegs, and bug-powder, too;
That sofa must be covered new;
We've got to have a market basket;
And one thing more—I hate to ask it—
The parlor carpet's fading out,
And shall we buy, or do without?
The teapot leaks again, I see,
And something takes away the tea;
I feel quite certain that the last
Half pound has disappeared too fast;
I hate to think the girl will steal,
But that's a thing time will reveal.
And I forgot to tell you that
Four kittens are with the old cat,
And something must be done with them.
The ash-box, for the seventh time
Within as many weeks, is gone—
The rascals won't let things alone.
Please get some tacks, and as you go
By Mr. Doe's, just let him know
I want the hammer which I let
His wife take, and it stays there yet.
Now let me see if that is all:
Oh, no; I want a common ball
Of twine, a hatchet and some screws,
An here's an item of bad news:
The ice-man passed us by to-day,
And therefore I'm compelled to say
That both the meat and milk are spoiled.
Those shutter-hinges must be oiled.
We're out of soap and matches, too;
And one thing more before you go;
I want some worsted, just about
By one shade lighter than the lot
We got at first, and just a cast
Darker than we got the last!"

Shades of the cast-off! here I leave—
Can mortal man stand this and live?
If mind and body can endure
This awful strain, one thing is sure:
These and a thousand other things
Give our prospective riches wings,
And sadly mock our early dreams—
Housekeeping is not what it seems!
"'T is distance" (I have proved it true)
That "lends enchantment to the view."

TWO.

"Well, Dare?" It was not his first question; he was weary waiting for its answer, and he gazed down now passionately, anxiously, into the dreamy countenance of the woman at his side.

But a little moment he had waited, but to Wilfred Hale it flashed suddenly the first moment of an eternity that might seperate him from her.

A little moment, but he had planned it differently; even then he had dreamed to pillow the fair head on his bosom, to be as rich in lover's rights as though time had grown a year.

A little moment, and—a blank!

"Well, Dare?"

The words burst, almost a wild cry, from his lips, as if perforce she raised her eyes to his.

"You do not give me much time," she said; "but if it were a week I do not know that I could answer better. I scarcely know what to say. I——"

But she did not finish; his trembling hands had clutched hers tightly—his face, strained, haggard, was bent close to her own.

"Dare—Dare, what strange words are these you speak? Time—time, and you do not know what to say? What were you about to say when I stopped you? Surely—surely that you love me, that never as woman loved man you love me, Dare."

As he spoke his face grew whiter; even more tightly he clutched her little hands. Wilfred Hale was no mean man, ordinarily; in this intense moment he must have moved the most indifferent woman to pity or to fear.

But this woman neither pitied nor feared him; she liked him quite too well.

Yes, she liked him; it seemed to her until this moment never quite so well. The grandeur of his passion thrilled her; that she had roused it suddenly grew sweet beyond compare; she stood spell-bound, all forgetful that Wilfred Hale was waiting for her to speak.

A tender light was creeping into the violet eyes, but he did not note; doubt blinded him to all save the torturing picture of a woman's face fixed on his—mute, pitiless—for all his passionate appeal.

"Dare!"

A little cry but a soul's agony spoke therein. A little cry, but it reached her heart-strings and tinged her face with the first bit of passion she had ever known for him.

A bit, but a rare bit for any lover; unvailed by woman's pride, shining free, triumphant in the eyes turned to Wilfred Hale. He noted bewilderedly, then unconsciously he dropped the little hands and stood regarding her speechless, dreading it should fade away.

If she realized, for once, Dare Winter cared not; still straightly, openly, the rare violet eyes met his as though it were a common thing; she raised a hand and laid it familiarly on his arm.

"You are a pretty lover, Mr. Wilfred Hale;" so she began, archly, but with a tremor that deepened as she spoke. "You were long enough asking me to marry you, and now, because I do not drop into your arms the first little minute, because I thought you deserved punishing a bit before I——"

She would have finished calmly—it did not occur to Dare Winter, that moment, that she was telling him a lie. But again he interrupted; not as before—ah! truly what was before! the fair head was on his breast now, the torturing blank was as though it ne'er had been.

"Before you told me that you loved me, Dare?"

A strain of melody his satisfied soul set to the words. Not strange, perhaps; she only remembered that she loved him now, with a love every touch of his strong hand deepened, with a passion rising mightier, tenderer, with each kiss that met her lips.

"I was a foolish lover," he murmured after a little. "I thought you meant the ugly words, my Dare. Ah, dearest, you did know what to say! For what were you about to say when I stopped you? Surely, surely that you loved me—that never as woman loved man you loved me, Dare?"

"Yes, but I did not say it," she answered, quickly, passionately; "you know my heart as yet only as you read my face. I want to say it, Wilfred—I love you! I love you with all my heart and soul, as never woman loved man before!"

Surely Wilfred Hale was a fortunate lover thus to read a woman's soul. But, though it enraptured him, it startled him; he had never thought Dare so intense; somehow a fear possessed him that he might never see her so again. As suddenly came the impulse which, even in the moment of its awakening, found vent upon his lips.

"Will you swear it, Dare?" he said, eagerly, while with even more passionate intensity he folded his arms about her and looked deep down into her tender eyes.

But no sooner had he spoken than Wilfred Hale was ashamed. Surely she had done enough; she had shown him her heart as few women would have done. She would be angry with him now—justly angry; she would believe that he distrusted her, perhaps——"

His lips parted for retrieval, but——

"I will swear it; yes, Wilfred, I will swear anything you wish. Why not?" so her loving voice broke in. Why not, surely? He would not have been man now if he had spared her—if he had stopped short of the fondest, most passionate protestations that such an oath could hold.

She would swear anything he wished, and she kept her word; freely, joyfully she yielded to his demands. She loved him; why should she not?

So Dare Winter was betrothed; and, with her hand locked close in her lover's, she walked home proud, happy, though their way lay by the sea—the sad sea calling to her, calling to her—singing the same song—the wild song—as loudly, as triumphantly as through the years before.

Shall the sea give up its dead? Loudly, more loudly it called to her, closer creeping, beating heavier the shore each moment as though mad that she heard it not. For she heard it not; above its roar sounded the low voice of her lover, before which the past it honored had sunk to nothingness.

Shall the sea give up its dead?

The wild song was not to pass unheeded other days. But, though on the morrow she listened to it, she listened with a smile; the hope to which through all she had clung so fondly grew suddenly an empty bit of past, for which—mystery as she knew it—she had but gratitude.

The song only annoyed her now.

"To love so long and forget so suddenly: I would not have Wilfred know of it for worlds. He would think it strange, and I suppose it is strange not to know you love a man till he asks you to marry him, and then for the little love of a minute to outweigh the love of years. Well, I do not know; I only know that I love Wilfred Hale."

So she mused, despite herself, a bit more puzzled as the days passed—a bit more bewildered to hear the sea calling, calling, and to realize that what she had yearned for the long years, with a boundless passion, with a hope that would not be denied, was now—nothing, nothing unto her.

If the sea were to give up its dead, she would not be even glad.

The song only annoyed her now. For though the days passed it annoyed her yet; the wild sea would not be stilled. Only above it rose the low voice of her lover, before which the past it honored sunk still to nothingness.

One night he came not; the morrow brought this little line, mailed from the nearest town:

"Business called me away so suddenly, dear, I could not come. Are you prepared for a surprise and—a hurried wedding too? I will explain all when I come."

A confident little line, sent in the sweet certainty that the surprise would be as pleasant for her to know as it had been for him to write. She would understand at what he hinted, and——

He could not help hinting at it in this joyful little question. How different it might have been he thought, blissfully; how hard to break this thing, in some respects so hard in itself, to a woman that loved him less!

"I love you—I love you with all my heart and soul, as never woman loved man before."

Never before, never before! So his darling had spoken and—ah! yes, she would prove it now. She would understand, and——

Again the joy of realization grew too deep for certain thought. As never man before, it seemed to him, Wilfred Hale went on his way.

And?——

Three times over Dare Winter read the little line. A surprise and a hurried wedding; what could Wilfred mean by that? Surely, oh, surely not.

Alas, for Wilfred Hale! With an open shiver, she threw the note aside and turned to the other letter the mail had brought—a family letter full of dry details which, in her usual fashion, she hurried over, and was folding, when a written corner caught her eye.

A postscript in Aunt Ruth's own:

"For all the time you made over it, I don't suppose it'll interest you much now to hear that John Graves is home. Actually turned up! I couldn't believe my eyes when he walked in here yesterday; I was so amazed I never asked him where or how. He asked after you right off, and said, for all the way you'd treated him, he had come back just to see you. What he meant perhaps you know; I was too amazed to ask. But I told him you were engaged—I was very thankful I'd just heard. He didn't say anything, only laughed. If I were you, if he comes, I wouldn't see him; I'm afraid of a man that laughs like that."

The sea had given up its dead!

Perhaps it was not strange. A less woman than Dare Winter might have thrilled to hear it; perhaps not strange that she, hearing it so, should tread the past to the exclusion of the present, for this little moment should quite forget Wilfred Hale.

Her past! Two lovers who had been lovers from childhood, so long, so early, that love's sweet beginning was a mystery to both; two lovers growing up each day to greet with a love stronger, deeper—a hope than which hope was never more assured.

Her past! Two parting on the sands but for a little, to meet no more this side the grave.

This, until this morning, with all its sad and blissful shadings, included Dare Winter's past. From the day her lover left her she had had no word from him; two years she had watched and waited whilst the silence gave no sign.

Two years John Graves lay among the dead, of which the jealous sea tells no tales. And now!

"He has come back just to see you, for all the way you have treated him."

Alas, for Wilfred Hale; in the present she had no thought for him. The way she had treated him—what strange words on her lover's lips! How had she treated him but to watch and wait and yearn for him all through the dreary days! How but to cling to him each hour more fondly with a hope that would not be denied!

The way she had treated him? How——

But suddenly the hard truth pressed down. Some jealous fate had stepped between them—some little accident which had made waiting unto him a bitter draught far beyond waiting unto her. What a hard thing, what a needless thing——

As suddenly her face brightened. It mattered not, it never would matter more; he was coming back just to see her, coming back despite it all. Prescience was upon her; she knew that, ere the evening, he would come—the man she had loved so long, so early, she never knew when love began.

Never in all as she loved him in this moment—this moment when, by chance, her eyes fell upon the little line she had cast aside.

Alas, for Wilfred Hale! She recalled it all, all—her love, her sworn love, with a faint cry of amaze.

"I did this—I did this!" she murmured. "After all my love for him, I could do this! Worse, I could think, I could say that if the sea gave up its dead, I would not be even glad. Oh, John! my true, my only lover, what shall I say to you of this!"

Alas, for Wilfred Hale!—no pity, no thought even, that moment, for the grave she was digging in his heart!

* * * * *

One came, ere evening, with a hard laugh upon his lips, with a swimming brain and an aching heart—came desperately, he knew not why, to a woman's encircling arms and a life-long happiness—came despairingly, to find nothing between them save the miscarried letters he had sent from the distant land. To know not, to care not why, and to smile only dreamily at the sweet confession Dare Winter made to him.

One came as never man came before, hasting with winged feet to his beloved, to hear a strange story ending thus:

"I always liked you, Wilfred, but I never thought to love you till the night you asked me to be your wife. Something drew my heart to you—some painful consciousness, perhaps, of my useless yearnings, some sudden hope to find a refuge in your tender love. I loved you then; then when I believed him dead. That love grew to a mighty passion, and delusion, too. I even ceased to regret the past; I came—— But I cannot speak it; selfish as I may seem to you, it makes me shudder now. Wilfred, Wilfred, surely you must understand! Since the dead has arisen what heart can I have for you? A little thing—I say not to wound but to comfort you. I would go with him to the ends of the earth, but what you hinted at—that it was decided you were to go for two years to China—when I read your note, I realized it sharply; Wilfred, I could not have gone with you gladly, not even after the love I swore you—not if the sea still held its dead. Is this the love to satisfy your passionate soul? Oh, think of it, and be comforted!"

The strange story he read, pausing in his mother's home, the word sent by the woman that loved him—she who had sworn that she loved him as never woman loved man before!

The little moment had dawned, the first of the eternity that was to separate him from her. But he barely realized; his eyes looked out dreamily, where the waves were moaning dreamfly, down to the sunny waste where his darling had plighted her troth to him. To see——

A fair girl with her hand on her lover's arm.

"Dare!"

It was the only sign his stricken soul could give.—Frank Leslie's.

A GLANCE AT OLD TIMES IN THE VIRGINIA PENINSULA.

BY J. ESTEN COOKE.

Old Virginia was the neck of land between the James and the York. This was the real heart of the country, from which the life-blood flowed toward the extremities, the stage of all the old dramas, of the jarring passions, the fierce collisions, of the pageants, the splendors, the animosities, of former times.

It is very curious to go away to this old land and visit some of the historic localities. They are there still, and easily reached; but to have anything suggested to us by the sight of them, we must remember what took place there. The world will not read the history of Virginia—perhaps because it has never been written. There never was richer material, more striking comedy and tragedy—but the dust covers it. A day's journey in a steamboat from Richmond down James river, around Old Point to the head of York river, takes the traveler completely around old Virginia, and all the famous localities pass in succession. At Dutch Gap, where James river makes a great bend, and comes back, after seven miles, to within a hundred yards of the same spot, a few bricks and a grass grown mound mark the site of the former "City of Henricus." It is a lonely plateau now, from which you look down on the silent river; but once the place was thriving, and had its church and forts—Faith in Hope and others; and Sir Thomas Dale, High Marshal of Virginia reigned here. He was a very singular personage, this good Sir Thomas. When people would not go to church, he thurst awls through their tongues; and once when a conspiracy burst forth against him, he broke the offenders on the wheel—an incident of American history perhaps not generally known. He was indeed a very great "mixture." He labored hard for the convertion of Pocahontas; said that if he could make her a Christian, he would consider his long toils in the colony rewarded: and good Alexander Whitaker, the minister at Varina, recognized with enthusiasm the marshal's "knowledge of divinity, which be rare in a martial man." Nevertheless, he bored the tongues, broke on the wheel ard was a diplomate; for he sent to Powhatan, asking the hand of his young daughter in marriage, though nothing was better known than that there was a Lady Dale in England! He, it was, too, who sent Argall to drive away the French intruders on Virginia soil, at Mount Desert, on the coast of Maine; and that buccaneer official on his way back reduced the Dutch fort at Albany—another invasion of the sacred soil.

Here, at the City of Henricus, Pocahontas also lived with her husband, John Rolfe, and had a child born to her, who transmitted her royal Indian blood to, among others, the famous Randolph, of Roanoke. And still another resident of the place was Governor Wyat, author of a famous proclamation forbidding men and women to engage themselves to two persons at one time. Especially were the fairer sex cautioned against this misdemeanor: they were not to "contract themselves to two several men at one time," for women are "yet scarce and in much request, and this offence has become very common, whereby great disquiet arises between parties, and no small trouble to this government." The enormity must therefore cease, and "every minister should give notice in his church that what man or woman soever should use any word or speech tending to a contract of marriage to two several persons at one time, as might entangle or breed scruples in the consciences, should undergo corporal correction, or be punished by fine and imprisonment, according to the quality of the person so offending!"

This was actually a formal proclamation of his Excellency, and must have aroused fearful forebodings in the belles of the time. It is not recorded that any of them were ever whipped, but there was the law for it, and the age was matter-of-fact. They cut off people's ears here at Henricus and elsewhere; put them in the pillory; ducked scolding women in the parish duckingstool; and in Princess Anne threw poor Grace Sherwood into the water to ascertain whether she was a witch.

All along James river, as the traveler descends it, are the famous old localities: Bermuda Hundreds—the third Virginia settlement; Westover, the residence of Colonel Byrd; Brandon; Berkeley; and the ruined church at Jamestown, where the first stone of the American Republic was laid by Smith and the rest. This lonely spot is the stage of the whole first epoch of the "plantation;" of the hot rivalries, the hatreds, the wrangles of the factions; the starvation, the hope and despair, and the sudden rescue from destruction when my Lord Delaware providentially appears, lands from his ship, and falling on his knees, thanks God that he has arrived in time to save Virginia. Nothing is more moving than this old tragedy of the first years, with its shifting scenes and its fiery passions. The dust, however, lies thick upon the chronicle, and few have taken the pains to blow it away. Jamestown, to the men of today, has only a sentimental attraction as the locality of the first settlement; but it is much more than that. To the remarkable man, John Smith, and the remarkable events of the first epoch, succeeded a man and an event equally notable—Bacon and his rebellion. This was the stage of the fiercest scenes of that fiercest of dramas, the most passionate and striking event of American history up to the Revolution.

Passing on around Old Point, formerly the site of an Indian town, where Smith had a battle with them, the traveller leaves on his left the little village of Yorktown, enters the broad York, and is again in the midst of many localities connected with history. This was the heart of Powhatan's realm, and his royal capital, where Smith was rescued, was in sight of the present Yorktown. It was called Werowocomoco, the "chief place of council," and near it was the great Uttamussack shrine, the burial-place of the Indian kings, where the priests watched day and night, and celebrated their hideous rites. The shrine was a long "arbour" of boughs on a range of sand-dunes, and the bravest warriors regarded it with superstitious terror. As they passed in their canoes, they threw copper into the river to propitiate the terrible Kiwassa, and made long strokes of the paddle to get away from the dangerous spot.

As at Jamestown, a hundred scenes of the old chronicles pass at Werowocomoco. Pocahontas saved Smith's life on two occasions at the spot, and the locality of the Indian capitol has been clearly ascertained. It was near "Shelly," an estate of the Page family, on a plateau above the river. "Powhatan's Chimney," built nearly three centuries ago, is still there to mark the spot. The chimney and another structure are the most ancient remains of the first settlement of Virginia. The other is the "Stone House," on Ware Creek, across the York, which was built, almost beyond doubt, by Smith, about 1608. It was meant for a "place of retreat" in case of an Indian attack, and is still solid and substantial on its wild ridge among the laurel-trees.

An interesting locality of this old historic land is the large house on the "Rosewell," which stands on the north bank of the York, not far above Yorktown. This was the residence of the Pages, and was a famous old place at the time of the Revolution. It was built by Mann Page, who imported the material from England, passed the first brick through the hands of his eldest son, a baby in arms, and ruined himself before it was finished. It was finished, however, and in a style of great elegance. It was a large building with wings, the whole front two hundred feet, and the interior was wainscoted with mahogany, and decorated with pillars, with trailing vines and grape bunches of carved wood. On the roof was a broad space heavily floored with lead; observatories rose at each end; and here Jefferson and his friend, the master of the mansion, used to sit in the summer evenings and discuss theology and politics. This friend was the Hon. John Page, an able and excellent man. He was a soldier, a statesman, and so pious that it was the general desire of his friends that he should be ordained Bishop of Virginia. To-day Rosewell, like so many of the old Virginia houses, has passed into the hands of others, but it is standing firmly still, an imposing relic of past things, "more like a feudal castle than a modern dwelling," and brings back the days of the Revolution.

York and Gloucester, along the banks of the York, were famous regions in the old Virginia annals. Here was the scene of some of the bloodiest struggles of Bacon's rebellion—of the capture of Hansford, the brave young patriot, on a stolen visit to his ladylove, from which he passed to the gallows by order af the pitiless old tyrant Sir William Berkeley; of the capture of Cheeseman, and the escape of Drummond, the conspirator; and the end of all, a row of gibbets, with bodies hung on them in chains. Bacon's headquarters were at West Point, where Smith had seized Opechancanough by his scalp-lock and dragged him down, and where, just before Yorktown, Lafayette also made his quarters while awaiting the arrival of Washington, and listening to the long thunder of De Grasse's guns from the ocean.

These chance allusions—there is space for nothing more—to the Peninsula will indicate its great historic interest as the theatre of events in the history of Virginia. The territory is contracted, for if the traveller who descends the James and steames up the York returns by rail to Richmond, he has passed in a single day around the whole stage of so many moving events. Here the subject has been merely touched. Not even the name of Williamsburg has been written, and yet no locality except Jamestown has connected with it so many historical recollections. Long before the Revolutionary this old borough was already famous under the name of Middle Plantation. One hundred years before the American Declaration of Independence—that is to say, in the month of August, 1676—there met here a great crowd of the "prime gentlemen" of Virginia for a specific object. The meeting was held in the evening, and continued until midnight by the light of torches. The company was a motley one. On all sides were seen the laced coats and ruffles of planters, and the buff jerkins of troopers, armed with sword and pistol. At the head of them was fiery General Bacon, a young man twenty-eight, who, addressing himself with passionate eloquence to the assembly, swept all opposition before him. What he propssed was this: that every true Virginian should subscribe a solemn oath that he would oppose Berkeley to the last; more still, that he would "oppose all forces" sent from England "to reduce them." The oath was subscribed with acclamations, at Middle Plantation, by the glare of the torches: it was the Virginia Revolution taking place just a hundred years before the American Revolution, which it precisely resembled.

This "Middle Plantation Oath" was a fiery baptism for the infant Williamsburg; but that was to win its own celebrity, too. Like Jamestown, the name simply of the place suggests a whole epoch with its crowding scenes. From the first, Williamsburg was the "heart of the rebellion"—a title applied to the old Capitol, when Henry thundred against the Stamp Act. This passionate outburst of the great revolutionist was the beginning of the Revolution, though it was in 1765. It was called the "alarm-bell," and in Boston it was said that "Virginia had given the signal to the continent." As the years passed on, almost all the great political events of the time were connected with Williamsburg, where the Burgesses sat; and finally the Revolutionary war, after dragging its slow length from the heights of Boston to the far South, was to come to an end within about twelve miles of the spot where the struggle may be said to have begun.—Harper's Bazar.

DISEASE AMONG HORSES AND CATTLE.

PINK-EYE AND PLEURO-PNEUMONIA MAKE THEIR APPEARANCE IN PHILADELPHIA.

The intelligence that 1,200 horses are suffering from the new disease, "Pink-eye," in Pittsburg, has a peculiar interest here, where nearly 150 street car horses are suffering from the same affection. At the Tenth and Eleventh street stable's depot about 100 horses are in the worst stages, while upwards of forty recently brought from the West are more or less affected. There are a few cases at the Fourth and Eighth street stables and one at the Fifth and Sixth. In addition to this disease among horses pleuro-pneumonia has again broken out among cattle and threatens to become as general as it was two years ago. The fact that it exists in different localities widely apart is regarded as a most unfavorable indication. A Germantown dairyman has five head suffering from the disease at the present time, while two additional animals of the same lot were killed this week, in accordance with the law. In addition to the disease in Germantown, three herds in Delaware county, near Upper Darby, are likewise afflicted. These herds were visited by Dr. Gadsden yesterday, who found over a dozen suffering from pleuro-pneumonia, every one of which will have to be killed, as there is no cure for it. Apparent recovery is not infrequent, but the animal is always chronically affected and may be prostrated at any time, in which event the disease is invariably communicated to others. It was in this manner the Germantown herd was affected by a cow, which was attacked two years ago and seemed to have recovered, being turned loose with others. In every instance the law requires all herds among which pleuro-pneumonia exists to be quarantined for three months, during which time no cattle, however sound, can be sold from the place. The same law in reference to quarantining applies to cattle imported from England, and in pursuance of it Herkness, the stock man, has a herd down at Chester of fine Jerseys and Guernseys, which will remain there until the law allows their removal and disposition. A similar herd is quarantined by Cooper, of Coopersburg, the well-know stock man of Lehigh county. Dr. Gasden says this is the only means by which pleuro-pneumonia can be rooted out.—Phila. Times.

WANTED QUIET.—A nervous looking man went into a store the other day and sat down for half an hour or so, when a clerk asked if there was anything she could do for him. He said no, he didn't want anything. She went away and he sat there half an hour longer, when the proprietor went to him and asked if he wanted to be shown anything. "No," said the nervous man, "I just want to sit around. My physician has recommended perfect quiet for me, and says above all things I must avoid being in crowds. Noticing that you did not advertise in the newspapers, I thought that this would be as quiet a place as I could find, so I just dropped in for a few hours of isolation." The merchant picked up a bolt of paper cambric to brain him, but the man went out. He said all he wanted was a quiet life.—Peck's Sun.

THERE is in England a Children's Society for the Protection of Birds, and it is said that the membership now numbers over 23,000. Each child who becomes a member takes a pledge as follows: "I promise to be kind to all birds as far as I can; to feed birds in winter with spare crumbs instead of wasting them; not to molest or disturb birds during their building season; not to rob the nests of their eggs, or to tear out the nests; not to kill the young ones or otherwise injure them; to try and induce others to take an interest in these beautiful creatures, and promote the objects of the society."

JOHN W. GARRET, of Baltimore, has just imported $200,000 worth of paintings from Europe.

AN OREGON firm hopes to drive a thriving business in canning sweet potatoes.

WILL WONDERS EVER CEASE?—Mr. John F. Fledderman, the well-known Merchant Tailor, in Union Block, writes: "I was a sufferer for many years with Neuralgia and Rheumatism, and found no relief until I tried St. Jacob's Oil. After using two bottles I was entirely cured."—Fort Wayne, (Ind.) Sentinel.

THE TRIAL of the assassin Guiteau has been postponed until November 14th.

THE MALLEYS have been committed for trial before the Superior Court at New Haven for the murder of Jennie Cramer. Bail was refused.

THE fools are not all dead yet but there is one less in Virginia. He shot himself on Tuesday in the presence of a girl who had rejected him.

IT IS a fact pretty well settled now that Ulysses is going to swing a mighty heavy influence during the administration of the man with side whiskers.

THE REDUCTIONS of service on the steamboat and Star routes already made have effected a saving to the Government of over two millions annually.

CHESAPEAKE BAY and its tributaries, some statistician asserts, annually supply over 3,000,000,000 oysters to the markets of the country, which is over eighty oysters to each inhabitant of the United States.

THE STALWART BROOM is already for the work but the general sweeping out of the anti-Stalwarts will hardly commence until after the November elections are over and the returns counted. Then there'll be no further postponement on account of weather.

THE MUNICIPAL ELECTION in Baltimore on Wednesday resulted in the election of the whole Democratic ticket. The City Council is unanimously Democratic. The total vote for Councilmen aggregated nearly 38,000, of which the Democrats polled 23,600. Independents, 5,400, and Republicans about 8,000.

YESTERDAY was "Governors' Day" at the Atlanta International Exhibition and nine Governors were present. At the reception in the evening, Governor Colquitt, of Georgia, and Governor Bigelow, of Connecticut, each wore a suit of clothes made during the day from cotton picked at seven o'clock in the morning.

EX-GOVERNOR MORGAN, of New York, was on Monday nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate to be Secretary of the Treasury, in place of Mr. Windom, resigned, but he has respectfully declined the office. He says his physicians advised him not to accept at his time of life an office which would impose upon him such arduous duties. There is a very general belief throughout the land that Arthur knew Morgan would decline when he nominated him, and that Roscoe Conkling will ultimately be given the Secretaryship.

PROFESSOR KING, who went up in a baloon from Chicago about the middle of October, and who was thought by many to be lost, has turned up safe and sound again. The air-ship landed in the wilds of Minnesota and King and his only companion in the voyage, a signal-officer, had to walk seventy-five miles to civilization and a telegraph office. That explains why the aeronaut was not heard from for nearly a week after his ascension and why his friends and the public had generally given him up as another addition to the list of lost baloonists.

GRANT, Conkling and Stalwartism seem to be very much on top, just now, and that Garfield's policy was buried with him those who read and think can no longer doubt. Three years and more of Stalwartism and its accompaning evils seems inevitable. By that time it is probable that the country will want a change and will be in the humor to smash Stalwartism so flat that it will never be able to get on its feet again. The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they powder it up pretty fine, as the poet has remarked, though in somewhat different language.

ELECTION DAY approaches and our neighbors on the Eastern Shore are warming up to the occasion as usual. The orators are telling the old, old story, the organs are nailing lies by the column and the untiring candidate is taking the doubtful voter by the hand and inquiring after the health of his wife and children. In the mean time, all is quiet on the Appoquinimink. We have no election in Delaware this year so we can sit on the fence and enjoy the excitement our Maryland friends are having. Over in Cecil the Democrates are sufficiently harmonious to get through with a pretty safe majority and the State will doubtless give about the usual Democratic figures.

THE PRESIDENT yesterday nominated and the Senate confirmed Charles J. Folger, of New York, to be Secretary of the Treasury; Thomas L. James, of New York, to be Postmaster General, and Frank Hatton, of Iowa, to be First Assistant Postmaster General, to succeed Tyner, resigned by request. Judge Folger will accept, but it is believed that soon as a place can be made for him he will be transferred to the Supreme Bench and Conkling called into the Cabinet. It is quite plain that the man with side-whiskers is trying to "harmonize" a little for the present. An all-wool Stalwart Cabinet is only a question of weeks, and, the nomination of Jamas is merely a soothing potion for the anti-Stalwart mind. Hatton, who succeeds Tyner as First Assistant Postmaster General, is an Iowa editor, a full-blooded Stalwart and a third-termer.

TYNER sent in his resignation on Wednesday. It was hard to say "farewell" to the office of first assistant postmaster-general, but his invitation to quit was quite pressing—so he quit. He resigned conditionally, however; stipulating that his resignation was to be handed to the President on the condition that the request for it was not based upon charges against his "official honor or integrity, especially in connection with the alleged Star route frauds." James let him down easily by replying that the request for his resignation "was not based upon any reflection upon his personal or official integrity." The country would be glad to know what the request was based on.

THE COUNTRY BOY'S LONGING.

Almost every country boy has, at some time during his career beneath the paternal roof, an intense longing to go to the city to live. He tires of the green fields, the chatter of birds, the hum of insects, and decides that the pleasures, as well as the labors of country life, are too monotonous for him. He wants more excitement. After the day's work is done and the last chore performed he sits out on the cellar door, watches the stars come out, and dreams of the crowded streets, great marts of trade, marble palaces and torch-light processions which he has heard his older brother, who is a city drummer, so often describe. He thinks of the grand life of the sweet-scented city clerk, moving with easy grace behind the dry-goods counter, wearing a freshly-starched shirt every day of his life and amassing wealth at the rate of six dollars a week. He turns it all over in his mind, this hopeful, ambitious boy does, out there on the cellar door, beneath the silent stars, and decides that life in the country is next to a blank and barren failure. As his imagination goes on under a free rein, he can picture to himself his own career should he succeed in becoming a city clerk, and the envy he would stir up among his country associaties when he would come home every summer for a vacation, dressed in a new suit of store clothes, with a moustache trained by the deft fingers of a city barber, and a complexion like mashed potatoes and cream. He can hardly resist the temptation to get right up and start, without waiting to bid the old folks good-bye.

Thousands of country boys outgrow this longing for a city career or have it persuaded out of them by a wise but stern parent, and in the end make valuable, contented and prosperous farmers, while thousands of others succeed in carrying out their youthful inclination and become city people, with a marked and growing contempt for the country and the country's ways. Of these, it would be interesting to know what per cent. achieve success and have the same measure of health and happiness as those who stay in the beautiful country which God made, and help to develop its resources. The per centage is not very heavy, we imagine. Doubtless you, most respected reader, can think of some bright boy who used to go around his country home, in bare feet, hickory shirt and one suspender, and who marched off to the city, commenced as an errand boy and to-day is at the head of a great mercantile establishment, and owns a brown-stone front. But is he any more happy, and will he live longer than those you can name who have staid at home and, by their own exertions, have achieved success in the country? We guess not. At least, we believe the precedents don't say so. Some boys will win success and others will fail whether they adopt for their field of labor the city or country, and while the opportunities may be greater to win wealth in the city the chances for health, contentment and long life are decidedly on the side of the country. Therefore, we say, boys, stick to the farm, or to your village, if you are a village boy, and be honest, energetic, performing your labor with enthusiasm, as though it were a pleasure instead of a task. Though you will doubtless never be able to fail for half a million in the country, you will get about as many square inches of contentment out of this life as any of your prosperous city cousins.

Literary Gossip.

MARK TWAIN contributes an exceedingly humorous sketch to the Century Magazine for November, entitled, "A Curious Experience."

WITH the November number, Scribner's Monthly takes on its new name: The Century Magazine. It is a brilliant number in every respect.

ALL the girls and boys who read St. Nicholas, and they are many, will be delighted with the November number of this brightest of juvenile periodicals.

GEORGE PECK, of the Milwaukee Sun, and Bill Nye, of the Laramie City Boomerang, two of the great laugh-promoters of the West, are both baldheaded.

AMONG the more entertaining features of Lippincott's Magazine for November is a finely illustrated paper by Charles Burr Todd, describing "A walk over Montauk," and "A Varied Entertainment," a humorous sketch, depicting some recent frolics of American art students in Paris.

THE JUDGE, a new illustrated weekly, devoted to making the world laugh, has the floor. No. 1, volume 1, is a good one all through. The cartoons are quite as good as any that have appeared in Puck recently, and the reading matter is fresh, bright and breezy. Wales, Worth and Hopkins are the artists. We welcome the Judge as an exchange.

THE sixty-third volume of Harper's Magazine is concluded with the November number, which, by the way, contains many entertaining features, among them being, "In Cornwall with an Umbrella," by W. H. Riding; "Journalistic London" (second paper), by Joseph Hatton; "Ohio's First Capitol," by Alfred Matthews; and "The Land of The Midnight Sun," by John Habberton.

Chips.

— The first man who makes a joke on the Thanksgiving turkey, this year, shoot him on the spot.

— Wouldn't it be well for some capitalist to start a fund for the widow of the late Rutherford B. Hayes?

— Pennsylvania speculators have bought an Egyptian mummy and taken out insurance policies on its life in about a dozen grave-yard companies. They think they have struck a bonanza.

— Kalakaua was not able to sell his kingdom during his late tour. In truth, his kingdom is not a desirable piece of property, it being a little too large for a building lot and hardly ample enough for a farm.

— There is a town down the Peninsula that seems to be improving itself to death. Every time a citizen puts a new button on his front gate or whitewashes his pig pen the local paper cries out that "there is a fear in the community that the spirit of improvement is too rapid to last."

— "Do you want a brand-new joke?" he said, as he came in with a three-by-five smile on his countenance, and holding his sides to save his vest buttons. "The best thing you have heard this season, and you want to put it right down. I just thought of it as I came around the corner. Here goes: Why is a bald head like the future state? You give it up, of course. Well, because there is no dying or parting——" The inquest will be held to-day.

— We have received from the publishers, Oliver Ditson & Co., a new music book full of hymns and notes; some of the awfulest double-barreled looking notes we ever saw, too. We haven't had time to try any of the music yet, but we have laid the book up where we can get it when we want it. After we have warbled "To be There," and "Dash Down the Cup," a few times, we infer that rents will come down about sixty-per cent. on Broad street, south of Cochran square.

WHILE a salute was being fired at the Military Academy at Chester yesterday afternoon, in honor of the French visitors who passed through the city on their way to Philadelphia, Cadet Merrick, of Washington, had both arms blown off by the premature discharge of one of the guns.

Fashion's Freaks.

— Striped plushes border black dresses.

— Tan colored gauntlets are worn with light dresses.

— Black net mask veils with large dots are the favorites.

— Black and white ostrich plumes trim the new fall hats.

— Ostrich feathers are used to trim many fine costumes.

— Gay colored and striped plushes are used for overskirts.

— Skirts of gay striped plush will be worn by young ladies.

— Red and green will be the fashionable contrasts of colors.

— The Marie Antoinette polonaise will be popular with young ladies.

— Ribbons this season are remarkably handsome, and, it may be added, remarkably costly.

— Some of the chenille fringes are a foot deep, and the jet beads used with them are as big as plums.

— For embellishing house dresses the whim of the moment is a huge Vandyke collar, falling low at the back.

— Evening hats so far seen have very little lace, and the gold and silver visible last winter is not so much favored.

— Beaver hats are seen smooth over the crown, with the hair growing thicker and thicker, until it appears like fur on the edges.

— The large round hats of plush, velvet or beaver are much larger than any yet worn. Large quantities of feathers are used for trimming.

— Flannel petticoats in London are now adorned with scallops around the lower edge, and a deep frill of imitation Valenciennes lace under the scallops.

— The materials used in the new costumes are heavier than those of last season, consisting mostly of plush, velvet, satin, moire, cheviot and the heavy qulities of cashmere and camle's-hair.

— Mother Hubbard cloaks for little children are now made of navy blue cloth, with plush facings of old gold, bronze or red; or else they are of gray corduroy, with deep collar of blue or red plush.

"I DON'T WANT A PLASTER," said a sick man to a druggist, "can't you give me something to cure me?" His symptoms were a lame back and disordered urine and were a sure indication of kidney disease. The druggist told him to use Kidney-Wort and in a short time it effected a complete cure. Have you these smyptoms? Then get a box or bottle to-day—before you become incurable. It is the cure; safe and sure.—Knoxville Republican.

An Indiana man at the Chicago exposition mistook a Babcock extinguisher for a water tank and tried to get a drink. The machine took his red nose for a fire, and let fly straight at the mark, and the Indiana man has not stopped running yet.—Rochester Express.

"Lay off your overcoat or you won't feel it when you go out," said the landlord of a western inn to a guest who was sitting by the fire. "That's what I'm afraid of," returned the man. "The last time I was here I laid off my overcoat. I didn't feel it when I went out, and I haven't felt it since.—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

Some days ago we said that unless hunters brought us some of the game they bragged about, we would not publish their fabulous tales. The following afternoon a man from over near Laramie Peak brought in eleven blackbirds and a mule that he had shot by mistake, and laid them at our feet. We do not insist on documentary evidence now any more. A good honest man's word is good enough for us.—Bill Nye.

A LADY IN THE MATTER.—That "woman's wit is often superior to man's wisdom," was convincingly proved in a circumstance that occurred in this city recently. It appears that Mr. Ludwig Schwarzler, a widely known Grocer on Station Road, suffered with a very painful rheumatic headache to such a degree, that he was obliged to seek the aid of a physician. All medicines he used were of no avail. This induced Mrs. Schwarzler to buy St. Jacob's Oil. She procured a bottle for her husband. With the second application he found relief. The pain left him, and he is as well as ever again. A remedy acting as promptly as this certainly deserves universal patronage.—Chillicothe, (Ohio), Ross County Register.

A Hamden man was in the city yesterday supplying himself with furnishing goods. "You call this good durable cloth in these shirts, don't you?" "Durable? Yes, sir, there is no better in the market. Here is this shirt I have on; I've worn it a year." "Great guns! How the old woman would give it to me if I didn't change my shirt oftener than that. Kep' it pretty clean, though, mister."—New Haven Register.

By Universal Accord,

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS are the best of all purgatives for family use. They are the product of long, laborious, and successful chemical investigation, and their extensive use, by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, proves them the best and most effectual purgative Pill that medical science can devise. Being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use, and being sugar-coated, they are pleasant to take. In intrinsic value and curative powers no other Pills can be compared with them; and every person, knowing their virtues, will employ them, when needed. They keep the system in perfect order, and maintain in healthy action the whole machinery of life. Mild, searching and effectual, they are especially adapted to the needs of the digestive apparatus, derangements of which they prevent and cure, if timely taken. They are the best and safest physic to employ for children and weakened constitutions, where a mild but effectual cathartic is required.

For sale by all druggists.

Several wagon loads of leather have been dug out of the ground near Sandwich, Mich., and the people have no recollection how it came there. The mystery is easily explained. A railroad restaurant once stood on the spot, and what is supposed to be leather is merely the remains of thousands of ham sandwiches, which passengers threw around promiscuously after vainly endeavoring to insert their teeth into them. Hence the name of the adjacent town: Sandwich.—Norristown Herald.

WHAT AILS YOU?—Is it a disordered liver giving you a yellow skin or costive bowels; which have resulted in distressing piles or do your kidneys refuse to perform their functions? If so, your system will soon be clogged with poisons. Take a few doses of Kidney-Wort and you'll feel like a new man—nature will throw off every impediment and each organ will be ready for duty. Druggists sell both the dry and liquid.—Evansville Tribune.

DR. MOTT'S Liver Pills are the best Cathartic Regulators,

DUBNO'S CATARRH SNUFF cures Catarrh and all affections of the mucous membrane.

BAKER'S PAIN PANACEA cures pain in Man and Beast. For use externally and internally.

DR. ROGER'S Vegetable Worm Syrup instantly destroys worms and removes the Secretions which cause them.

DR. GREEN'S Oxygenated Bitters is the oldest and best remedy for Dyspepsia, Billiousness, Malaria, Indigestion, all disorders of the stomach, and all diseases indicating an impure condition of the Blood, Kidneys, Liver, Skin, etc.

HENRY'S CARBOLIC SALVE.—The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns and all kinds of Skin Eruptions, Freckles and Pimples. The salve is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction in every case or money refunded. Be sure you get Henry's Carbolic Salve, as all others are but imitations and counterfeits. Price 25 cents.

HOW TO SECURE HEALTH.—It seems strange that any one will suffer from the many derangements brought on by an impure condition of the blood, when Scovill's Sarsaparilla and Stillingia, or Blood and Liver Syrup will restore perfect health to the physical organization. It is indeed a strengthening syrup, pleasant to take, and has proven itself to be the Best Blood Purifier ever discovered, effectually curing Scrofula, Syphilitic disorders Weakness of the Kidneys, Erysipilas, Malaria; all Nervous disorders and Debility, Billious complaints and all Diseases indicating an impure Condition of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, Skin, etc. It corrects indigestion. A single bottle will prove to you its merits as a health renewer, for it acts like a charm, especially when the complaints of an exhausted nature, having a tendency to lessen the natural vigor of the brain and nervous system.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the summer 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctor said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs. I laughed at my friend, thinking that my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy him, when to my surprise and gratification, I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with Diseased Lungs will be induced to take Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, and be convinced that Consumption can be Cured. I have taken two bottles and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists.
